Bill Tilden, Ty Cobb and Jay Gould Three of the Most Brilliant Stars in Firmanent of Sports

HARD TASK TO PICK PRESENT DAY CHAMP WHO BLANKETS FIELD

Kings in Majority of Sports Are Only a Jump or Two Ahead of Numerous Contenders for Their Crowns-Three Exceptions

ATHLETIC fame is as evanescent as the perfume of the Lady in Black, and the attitude of the public toward a champion just about as fickle as that same maid. The pages of athletic history are studded with heroic deeds, feats of brain and brawn that caused the cheers of spectators in another day

Yet, when a champion loses the vital spark that kept him on top of the seething heap; when he slides down to the oblivion reserved for those who were once great, his successor is hailed as a better man than he was.

All champions are not of the same caliber. One has semething in skill or strength or quickness of mind that his predecessors or successors lacked, Some title-holder of the present day must stand out as outclassing all the others in his sport; some title-holder must hold the laudable position of being further in advance of his competitors than any other sporting king,

WHO is it? Dempsey in the ring? Tilden in tennis? Sarazen in golf? Milburn in polo?

What About Dempsey?

THE Manassa Mauler fought his way to ring pre-eminence through a field I remarkable for its lack of ability. Jack treated them with as little consideration as they deserved, and proved himself a real champion.

But, compared with the title-holders of the past, he doesn't stand out like a Kohineer in a coal pile. He has close competition, and, in the opinion of many, could not be rated as the greatest champion we have ever had. There was Jim Jeffries, the most powerful man physically that ever climbed through the ropes. Jeff was monarch in a day when the greatest heavyweight field that ever rubbed its shoes in resin was lined up against him. Fitzsimmons, Corbett, Choynski, Rulin-any of them would have had an excellent chance with our present champion were they in their heyday in this modern struggle, and Jeffries bent them all,

So good as Mr. Dempsey is, he cannot claim to outclass his field of champions as title-holders in other sports have done. Is Sarazen the man?

Hardly. Gene has proven himself a wonderful golfer, a boy with the greatest competitive soul of his day and generation, and a master of every shot in the bag, but with Walter Hagen, Hutchison, Barnes, Vardon, Ray and a score of others in the field today and in the misty past, Sarazen cannot be said to outclass all the champions of golfdom.

AND Hoovers No. Though the Duluth star took no one's wash in the Diamond Sculls, and proved himself to be an oarsman of superlative skill, we in Philadelphia believe Jack Kelly was and is a better man than Walter Haover.

Tilden's Skill

Local pride can puff itself up at the thought that one of our boys is a champion; one who comes as close to spread-engling his field as any of them. William Tiden, lanky, black-baired Bill, whose assembling assertment of tennis shots is the wonder and admiration of the present generation, is the Tilden is a title-holder, who, not only is a perfect technician, but a man whose fighting heart is second to mone. He has shown this in a score of graeling battles, but in none more conclusively than when Bic Norton came within a point of winning the world's championship, only to have Big Bill rally, and tear the expected victory away from the Australian.

Bill has close competition with Johnston, Patterson and others ready to battle him to the death; and from behind the curtain of the past, peer champions-Larned, Brooke and other wizards of the net. But Bill Tilden bows the knee to none of them.

In polo, Devereux Milburn carries the banner as king-pin of the pony straddlers. In spite of his years he is still the best, but there is a memory of Foxhall Keene to dim the claim that he is the greatest of poloists of all time. Keene played for years at a terrific clip, and, great as Milburn is, it would be hardly fair to say that he outclassed Keene as well as the others. Court tennts provides a man, who might be said to blanket his field more completely than a champion ever did. Though an amateur, Jay Gould can set a faster pace than any rival, he he working for glory or the long green. But his field is limited. It does not provide the competition that

WERE it not for that provision Jay Gould might well be said to be the one champion of the world who has never had a rival who came close to him in skill and winning ability.

The Georgia Peach

AT THE present time Babe Ruth absorbs most of the publicity showered on baseball stars. He can, without doubt, bit a baseball further than any other man that ever lived, but there is more to the game than biffing a pill to the attermost limits of the field. In the other departments of play, Ty Cobb is as far ahead of Ruth as Whiskaway would be in a race with a truck

For almost two decades the Georgia Peach, in Litting, base-running and engineering the old think tank, has been in a class by himself. He has had superiors in various angles of play. Speaker, for instance, always could range a bit farther for a fly hall; Hooper was a better thrower; Ruth could hit them longer distances; but, when it came to sublimated skill embodied in a single personnity, Cobb los never had an equal,

The field of baseball stars is the longest in sporting history, but in personality, ability and fighting heart, Tyrus Raymond Cobb occupies the pedes-

TO CANNOT be said that he is as far ahead of the greats of other I days as Gould is in court tennis, but beyond that single instance few more exalted names can be cited.

The Football Titans

ON HIS showing last year, Glenn Killinger should rank as not only the most valuable pigskin booter of the season, but one of the greats of all time. He could run, pant, his the line with a Rooseveltian smash, forward Pass and engineer plays with the best of them.

A wonderful player. Killinger, but when the critic glances down the waulted sisles of time he is bound to admit that there have been as good, and, Thorne, Stevenson, Hinkey, Hefflefinger! We need go no further. Fine as Killinger was in the strengous days of '21, no football experts will agree that he is better than were those dim, herole figures of the past.

 $m{T}^{O}$ NAME the greatest champion of all sports is a difficult, now, almost impossible task. We nominate Tilden, Cobb and Jay Gould as the leading lights. Take your choice,
